Not Lured Nor Hypnotized. "To say that my husband hypnotized this woman and lured her away from her home in Philadelphia is absurd. It is not in the nature of women to be lured or hypnotized against their wills.

If there is any fing or hypnotizing, it is all on the fir side.

"She knew that my husband was a married man, and what she did was done with open eyes and a true knowledge of the circumstances. She should never have had anything to do with him. As for him, I cannot blame him. "He is away from me ten months of the year, and I know the human heart and nature too well to expect that he would remain true to me during his long absences. I look at this with a broader philosophy than other women, for I recognize what human nature is. Other women see the light just as clearly, but endeavor to blind themselves to the spiritual thoughts and imagination drawn ideals.

"Whatever my husband has done. know that he still loves me and loves our child. I know that he will continue to love us and be good and kind to us as he always has been. I am waiting for him to come home now and w velcome him with all the love that is in my heart."

Nevertheless She Wept. As the young woman said this her voice broke and she wept softly, the tears falling on the head of the little Do You Think When You Play girl, who soon began to weep in symnot that som of a man. He has always been kind and gentle with me and with his child. Not once in the eight years of his married life has he raised his hand against me, nor has he ever been harsh or abusive. Neither is it true that he is a man skty-five years of age. He is only fonly-three."

Mrs. Bardeleben is dark, slender and beautifully formed. Her features are by Cupids as bearers of fashions, holds court in stately manner on the Second Floor; while above her throne are festoons of green and flowers. Scores of canaries singing in gilt cages add brilliancy to the picturesqueness of the effect. It is one of the most novel ideas ever designed to emphasize the period of Easter fashions and hail the advent of Spring. The Main Floor decorations are equally attractive and novel enough also to evoke the most enthusiastic praise. The window displays will also be very alluring.
